The Reds' success both during their playing days, and the even more far-reaching success they achieve after their playing days are a testament to not only their own will to succeed, but also to their families, to Eaton High School and Eaton High School Athletics, and to the entire Eaton community.

From Band of Brothers miniseries recalling the 101st Airborne in World War II: "How we lived our lives...was as varied as each man...each of us would be forever connected by our shared experience...we knew that we could depend on each other, so we were a close-knit group. King Henry V was talking to his men, and he said, 'From this day to the ending of the world, we in it shall be remembered, we lucky few, we band of brothers.'"
